Dear Jim

Thank you for our recent meeting, where you explained and demonstrated your new electronic musical instrument, the 'Jammer'.

This is a logical and sensible design that tackles many of the problems that deter many students from mastery of a conventional instrument, and in today's world, it has the potential to expand live instrumental music making to a wider range of people than we are currently able to encompass through existing Western traditional instruments. It helps bridge the gap between live performance on these instruments and music production in the studio via computer-based music composition programs.

As we agreed, the impact of your new system on the weight of acceptance of the traditional and the transitions between them will be the key issues to tackle and I will watch progress with interest.

Yours sincerely
